Fall is among us. Chili, bonfires, hoodies, and classes. Fall is also training season. There is a team that is finalizing some financial / legal / accounting seminars. I hope to report on this next month. Along with the great classes ASA Midwest offers, ASA national has many webinars that are available. My initiative going into my presidency was education. I feel you are never too old to learn something new. At home my family and go around the dinner table and share at least one thing we learned that day.

A member responded to my request about ideas for training topics. That idea was liens. That will be part of the seminars that are coming. If anyone has any other ideas please share them with me. Our goal is to provide educational topics and meeting topics that are top of mind for our members. If you have any feedback on meeting programs or ideas for speakers, reach out to me, Susan Winkelmann susan@asamidwest.com or our programs chair, Chris O'Hagan, JD Kutter chris@jdkutter.com

Our speaker at the September 21st lunch meeting was Brandon Anderson, with the AGC of Missouri. He delivered a very impactful presentation on the topic of suicide in the construction industry. To say we were a very captivated audience is an understatement. Unfortunately far too many of us have been impacted by this terrible epidemic in our industry. Construction has the 2nd highest rate of death by suicide in the U.S. Brandon presented an overview, statistics, and most importantly all the resources available to anyone suffering with depression, anxiety, and feelings of despair. If you or someone you know is suffering, there is now a national help line which can be reached by dialing 988. We have also listed a number of other resources on the ASA Safety Page of the ASA Midwest Council website.

I look forward to seeing you at an ASA meeting or event soon! Stay Safe!

Recent Floods Have Raised Several Inland Marine Concerns

*Brian Risinger
JD Kutter*

Recently record rainfalls struck across the St. Louis Metro area which brought flooding to areas that usually have very little concern over this hazard. The biggest issue with flooding is that losses are typically catastrophic. Unlike fires or storms that can damage parts of a building or some of a contractor's equipment, if a contractor's yard full of equipment is flooded, it's likely that every piece of equipment is affected.

These large loss situations are when all of the insurance renewal meetings you've sat through over the years actually matter. On Monday July 25, 2022, contractors in the St. Louis Metro likely left their offices and yards with absolutely no thought about their insurance program, and much less how their equipment was insured. Fast forward to the morning of July 26, 2022, and many contractors had feet of water in their buildings, in their trucks, and submerging their equipment. This event wiped out entire fleets of trucks and equipment.

Contractors are familiar with the perils of theft, vandalism, vehicle collisions and other similar frequent causes of damage to their equipment. However very few consider catastrophic losses such as the flooding that recently occurred. How equipment is valued at the time of the loss becomes very significant when the total claim approaches six figures or more, as compared to individual incidents and isolated items.

There are two common approaches to valuations on Inland Marine policies typically used to insure equipment, which are Actual Cash Value and Replacement Cost. Actual Cash Value is going to use a depreciation schedule that depreciates equipment out. This is even more concerning given the impact of inflation on contractor's equipment both in the new and used market. Actual Cash Value paired with coinsurance penalties can further intensify the pain at the time of loss if equipment is not adequately insured to value.

As a rule, our recommendation for contractor's equipment is to seek Replacement Cost with Coinsurance waived or removed whenever possible. The contractor would update the values of their equipment to reflect the costs to replace, for premium payment purposes, and the insurance would then apply on a Replacement Cost basis. This arrangement maximizes the recovery payment in a claim situation and the cost is typically insignificant relative to the overall insurance program. Check your Inland Marine policy to see if you see ACV/Actual Cash Value or Coinsurance requirements which are represented as a percentage.

September proved to be a busy month in the political world, as Senators and Representatives returned to Jefferson City the week of September 12 for the constitutionally mandated veto session and started the special session that was announced by Governor Parson in August to address agricultural tax credits and a proposed income tax cut. In addition, candidates who were successful in the August primary election are gearing up for the November 8 general election, even though there are only a handful of competitive races across the state. All candidates used the veto/special session as an opportunity to host numerous fundraisers across the Capital City to build their campaign war chests.

Wednesday, September 12 was the day legislators gavelled into veto session, where members of the General Assembly are able to attempt overrides on any bills the Governor has vetoed from the previous legislative session. It was a quick session in both chambers, as no veto overrides were attempted, even though the House and Senate did not gavel out of veto session day later in the month.

Members also gathered for a special legislative session called by Governor Mike Parson, to address agricultural tax credits and a reduction of the income tax rate in Missouri. Some legislators urged Parson to expand his call of special session to deal with recreational marijuana and sports betting, but the Governor's spokesperson said that was not likely to happen.

As of the writing of this report, both chambers passed identical agricultural tax credit bills. There were some changes to the bill from what the Governor had requested; however, the Governor was on board and that bill appears to be on track to pass. However, as of the writing of this report, there did not appear to be an agreement in place between, Senate, and Governor's office on the amount of the income tax cut. The Senate passed a version of the tax cut that did not cut income taxes as much as Parson had requested and included future cuts that would be triggered by certain increases in revenues.

At the close of the fiscal year on June 30, the state had a general revenue balance of $4.9 billion. Individual tax collections rose by 11.8%, while sales taxes rose 13.1%. Some of the excess revenue can be contributed to the influx of federal coronavirus relief funds and extra federal money from the recent Medicaid expansion. However, several budget forecasters warn that once the coronavirus funds are expended, the state will need to dip into the budget surplus for capital improvement projects and programs, meaning the permanent tax cut sought by Parson could be detrimental in years to come.

In other news, Representative Bruce DeGroot (R-Chesterfield), withdrew his name from the November ballot. DeGroot has represented House District 110 for the last six years and would have been entering his final term. He will not be leaving the Capitol however, as DeGroot will join Senator-elect Curtis Trent as his chief of staff. DeGroot's departure from the election meant the Republican Central Committee in the area was left with the task of selecting a nominee to take his place on the ballot. At their recent meeting, the committee selected Justin Sparks, who currently works as a police sergeant for the St. Louis County Police Department. Sparks will face Democrat Josh Thackston of Wildwood in the November election.

Looking ahead, lawmakers will return to the campaign trail once the special legislative session wraps up. After the November elections, Republican Senators will gather for their caucus meetings in mid-November, where leadership positions will be decided. That will be followed by pre-filing of legislation on December 1 for the upcoming legislative session.

We will continue to keep you updated on political events in Jefferson City and around the state as they happen. Nikki Strong, Strong Consulting Group.

Protecting Workers from Electric Shock Hazards

An electric shock can cause anything from a slight tingling sensation to immediate cardiac arrest. The severity depends on the amount of current, the current's path through the body, the length of time the body remains in the circuit, and the current's frequency.

Electrical burns are caused when current flows through tissues or bone, generating heat. A severe shock can cause damage to blood vessels, nerves, and muscles that won't be visible. Anyone who receives a shock should seek emergency medical help immediately.

A shock may cause muscles to contract, preventing the person from pulling free. This increases the length of exposure, creating a greater risk of serious injury. Longer exposures at even low voltages can be just as dangerous as short exposures at higher voltages. Low voltage does not imply low hazard.

If a person is "frozen" to a live electrical contact, shut off the current immediately. If this is not possible, use boards, poles, or sticks made of wood or other nonconducting materials to push or pull the person away from the contact. It's important to act quickly but remember to protect yourself as well from electrocution or shock.

Protecting workers

Methods to protect against shock include insulation, guarding, grounding, electrical protective devices, and safe work practices.

- √ Guarding involves enclosing electric equipment to prevent contact, along with warning signs such as "Danger/High Voltage/Keep Out."
- √ Grounding involves creating a low-resistance path to the earth. It reduces the risk of shock, especially when used with other safety measures. An equipment ground helps protect the operator by providing a path for the current to pass from the tool or machine to the ground.
- √ Circuit protection devices limit or stop the flow of current automatically in the event of a ground fault, overload, or short circuit in the wiring system. Examples include fuses, circuit breakers, ground-fault circuit interrupters (GFCIs), and arc-fault circuit interrupters. GFCIs are used in wet locations, construction sites, and other high-risk areas. They interrupt the flow of electricity to prevent electrocution.

Employees who work directly with electricity should use any personal protective equipment required for the jobs they perform. This may include rubber insulating gloves, hoods, sleeves, matting, blankets, and protective helmets designed to reduce electric shock hazard.

Using appropriate and properly maintained tools protects workers also. Workers should check each tool before using it. If they find a defect, they should immediately remove the tool from service and tag it so no one will use it until it has been repaired or replaced.

Training

Train employees in the safety procedures for their jobs, including how to inspect equipment for defects. When working on electrical equipment, basic procedures to follow include:

- √ Deenergizing the equipment,
- √ Using lockout/tagout to ensure the equipment remains deenergized,
- √ Using insulating protective equipment, and
- √ Maintaining a safe distance from energized parts.

In short, preventing electric shock requires delivering training on the hazards, safe work practices, and protections adopted by the employer.

For additional information regarding the ASA Safety Committee, or to join the committee, contact our Safety Committee Co-Chairs: Rose Kastrup with CSA Advisors at (417) 761-4194 or Steve Williams with Bell Electrical at (314) 447-9071.
